

leads to another living area and an activity area with built-in bar which open onto a balcony overlooking the pool. The three children's bedrooms (with their two bathrooms, one of which has its own luxury spa bath) and the main bedroom (with its ensuite, walk-in dressing room and even a walk-in shoe robe) are also on this level, as is a laundry chute down to the laundry below. The home also includes an office from which Tony and Audrey run Vestra from – thus allowing the home to also serve as a display home for the company.

"Rather than focus on normal conventions, we focused on what we wanted from our home – this is the whole point of custom building. We needed four garages and extra storage space. We wanted a very large home office, and the children voted for a pool. We didn't want bathrooms that were high maintenance and difficult to clean. And we wanted large, versatile, entertaining areas," says Tony. "So in this particular Vestra home the master ensuite does not have the lovely spa bath that a lot of homes of this calibre have but it does however have a separate shoe walk-in-robe and a dressing room as this was what we wanted. The beauty behind custom building is that each family has different living requirements. What is important to one family may not be to the next. You should consider and determine what your priorities are, and that in turn should drive the design of your home so that it will enhance your lifestyle. ▶
